

Discover the Missing Piece - The Fundamental Role of EDR in EP Treatment of PTSD, Anxiety and Dissociative Disorders

Yuliya Cohen, Energy Restructuring Institute

Case Study

A 36 year old Caucasian woman was treated using EDR for her debilitating symptoms that included periods of nausea, lasting up to 12 hours with suspected diagnosis of a gastroenterological problem following a gallbladder operation. Her symptoms turned out to be a manifestation of a panic attack caused by an advanced state of energetic displacement. The panic attack and nausea were resolved during a single phone session using EDR. Her chronic panic disorder was resolved during a course of face-to-face treatment. She was asymptomatic upon follow up 2,5, and 8 years later.

Background

The current treatment models in the fields of medicine, mental health, and even energy therapies, are missing two key components:

1. A definition for the human energy field (HEF) as a protective functional organic membrane.
2. Understanding that the progressive vertical energetic displacement of the HEF is fundamental to the way that subtle energy systems work

Introduction

The Energetic Displacement Reintegration (EDR) model lies at the very backbone of major ancient spiritual traditions. It gives confirmation to many aspects of one's inner reality such as

- psychopathological states of depersonalization and disassociation
- post anesthesia related disorientation
- out of body states related to prolonged meditative practices
- near death experiences in clinical settings, due to accidents and attempted suicides

Objectives

To demonstrate how EDR, a generalized energy medicine mechanism, proved effective at addressing and treating the entire range of physical and emotional symptoms associated with trauma, anxiety, panic and PTSD disorders.

Methods

Regardless of the particular symptoms, concerns, or diagnosis, there are always four gates through which the displaced energy must pass to reintegrate fully into the body.

EDR is a four step protocol used to identify the nature of the displacement and to reintegrate the displaced energy into the body. Reintegration is assisted using

- A set of brain balancing techniques
- EDR breathing exercise
- EDR techniques for healing trauma

Mapping of Gates to Chakras

Four Levels of displacement

Displacement Related Symptoms

Gate	Physical symptom
Gate 1: Pelvic Diaphragm	- Ungrounded, spacey -diminished vitality, sex drive
Gate 2: Solar Plexus	-heart palpitations, IBS, insomnia, hot and cold flashes
Gate 3: Throat	- intense headaches and pressure -neck tension, sore throat, fear of dying, beginning of agoraphobia
Gate 4: Sphenoid bone	-dissociation, depersonalization -lack of physical sensations -racing and fixated thoughts -sinus, ear and vision problem

Conclusions

The existing medical model must be expanded through integration of an energy field based context within which physical and emotional symptoms can be viewed, diagnosed and treated in a way that acknowledges a client's inner experience.

Implications

Patients often seek separate treatments for individual symptoms related to energetic displacement from specialists in unrelated fields. This results in a delayed diagnosis of the condition and prolonged suffering for the patient. The EDR approach shortens suffering and saves time by tying together distinct labels of diagnosis into a unified mechanism.
